Clinical evaluation of 120 patients. To document the clinical and histopathologic characteristics of congenital blue nevi, 120 cases (101 clinical and 19 cutaneous only) diagnosed during the past 15 years were reviewed. Most of the clinical cases were diagnosed in newborns or children, with the median age of birth being 10 days. The lesions were uniformly circumscribed, smooth, skin-colored, round, 0.5 to 2.0 cm in diameter. Forty-two patients had multiple lesions and 20 had solitary lesions. In 100 of the 101 clinical cases, the lesions were located on the trunk or extremities. Histopathologic examination revealed that superficial dermal melanocytes had less than 5 mitoses/10 high-power fields, whereas deeper dermal melanocytes had more than 5 mitoses/10 high-power fields. No mitoses were found in the epidermis. The presence of a circumscribed, blue-colored lesion in the new-born period is suggestive of a congenital melanocytic nevus, which should be biopsied to rule out malignancy.
