Abstract art has proven to be a growing trend in the art world over the last few years, but a large portion of abstract painters struggle to even produce a semblance of a recognizable object. Dr. John Weiland is a software engineer, who did not have much use for computers until he got a job in a university where he witnessed people using virtual reality (VR) goggles to create full-scale 3D images. He then decided to use VR technology to create abstract images. Dr. Weiland is the co-creator and CEO of Let's Have Fun Labs, which provides VR software, content creation and services for social VR and real-world environments. The studio is located in the heart of Silicon Valley and has been one of the first companies to build custom virtual reality (VR) engines for the Oculus Rift and HTC Vive. The studio produces and hosts user-generated content, and it is the only company providing support for not only for the VR hardware, but also for all software created for both devices. Weiland has taught himself everything about 3D modeling and rendering, and he created many of his pieces by hand. He also produces a website on his free time called "How to Create Abstract Art," where he offers tips for creating stunning virtual landscapes in minutes

Sep 21, 2019 - I'm looking for a new license keys (utility) for all windows, Mac OS X and Linux. What I want is: . A: This is quite simple: you're looking for a generic "copy and paste" tool. This can be done in any modern OS with OS's utilities. Just grab a copy and paste (ctrl+v) of the text, and save it with a new name (I recommend.txt or.txt_bak) You can then go into your favorite text editor and find the one you saved, then simply re-add the line with that code. You can also do a quick search online for a text editor (I personally like NotePad++ and Notepad) and just download a version with that and drag and drop it onto your desktop (I like to do it in Notepad++). The example you provided is pretty straight forward: 1) get a copy of the line you want 2) copy the line 3) save it as a.txt file 4) Find it and drag and drop it into your notepad++ program. 5) paste the line. You can either remove the spaces, or use tabs instead. The easiest is to just copy the line and paste it into your file - you'll get a "tabbed" version in notepad++. You can then click on the "tabs" and delete the extra spaces. You can also convert the tabbed format to a "spaced" format using notepad++ 2d92ce491b
