The image was one of Sen. Mary Landrieu (D-LA) failing to hold up her right hand to take the oath of office for her new Senate seat. The image was tweeted by a leading conservative commentator who went on to claim that Landrieu is a "far left" liberal. The image was later deleted and pointed out the Senator was holding up the left hand. This embarrassed the commentator and he later tried to explain the problem to his fans. You see, the Senator is blind. And the rascal ought to know better. The rules of the Senate are a very complex thing and are different than the normal rules that govern all other offices of the US government and are found in the US Code. They are rules governing the conduct of Senators and are found in Rule XII. There is a prohibition against using cameras in meetings. However, that portion of the rule was modified later and was allowed to be used during the confirmation hearing for John Brennan. A proposed change to Rule XII says that "In any meeting, hearing, or legislative proceeding, the Senate may allow the televised electronic transmission of the proceedings of the Senate and Houses of Congress for the joint interest of the public and members of the Congress." What this means is that a blind Senator is still bound by the rules and can be filmed during legislative proceedings as long as they can be recorded by the television camera. And that didn't stop the Senator's detractors. They saw the image and assumed it was a straight up deceit. I was able to see the image and get a fair idea of what was going on before it was deleted. The Senator was blindfolded. You can see a blind Senator during the swearing in ceremony. It is not a deception at all. In fact, I'm not even sure that it was the Senator herself. A person can cheat with a blindfold. It's not difficult at all. Anybody can do it. However, that leaves the question of how a person can go through the swearing in ceremony. The answer is that they can. I've seen many swearing in ceremonies and there is a precedent for a blind Senator to take the oath of office. In fact, the Senate hired someone
